ANSWER KEY: CORRECTLY PUNCTUATED SENTENCES

Set 1:

Given: good morning everyone welcome to todays guest lecture on artificial intelligence

Correct: Good morning, everyone! Welcome to today's guest lecture on Artificial Intelligence.

Why: A comma separates a greeting from the people you're addressing. An exclamation mark shows enthusiasm, and the next sentence starts with a capital. Names of fields or titles, like Artificial Intelligence, take capitals on each main word. A full stop ends the final statement. An apostrophe + s shows possession: today's lecture.

Set 2:

Given: have you submitted your internship application yet

Correct: Have you submitted your internship application yet?

Why: A question ends with a question mark (?). The first word of a sentence takes a capital letter.

Set 3:

Given: the workshop covered communication teamwork problem solving and leadership skills

Correct: The workshop covered communication, teamwork, problem solving, and leadership skills.

Why: Commas separate items in a list. The comma before 'and' (the Oxford comma) is optional but common. A full stop ends the statement.

Set 4:

Given: my professor said practice consistently and success will follow

Correct: My professor said, “Practice consistently, and success will follow.”

Why: A comma introduces a quotation after 'said'. Quotation marks wrap the speaker's exact words, and the quote begins with a capital. The full stop goes inside the closing quotation mark.

Set 5:

Given: although the rain was heavy the students attended the symposium

Correct: Although the rain was heavy, the students attended the symposium.

Why: A comma follows an introductory (dependent) clause like 'Although the rain was heavy'. A full stop ends the statement.

Set 6:

Given: the following items are required for the laboratory session safety goggles gloves a lab coat and a notebook

Correct: The following items are required for the laboratory session: safety goggles, gloves, a lab coat, and a notebook.

Why: A colon introduces a list after a complete clause. Commas separate the items in the list. A full stop ends the statement.

Set 7:

Given: wow that was an incredible presentation

Correct: Wow, that was an incredible presentation!

Why: A comma follows an interjection when the sentence continues. An exclamation mark shows strong emotion.

Set 8:

Given: my friends laptop isnt working so he borrowed mine

Correct: My friend's laptop isn't working, so he borrowed mine.

Why: An apostrophe + s shows possession: my friend's laptop. An apostrophe in a contraction replaces missing letters: isn't = is not. A comma goes before 'so' when it joins two complete clauses.

Set 9:

Given: after completing the coding task the team celebrated their success

Correct: After completing the coding task, the team celebrated their success.

Why: A comma follows an introductory phrase like 'After completing the coding task'. A full stop ends the statement.

Set 10:

Given: can you believe our project won the first prize at the national innovation challenge

Correct: Can you believe our project won the first prize at the national innovation challenge?

Why: A question ends with a question mark (?). The first word of a sentence takes a capital letter.
